'I think we're losing sight of the bigger picture. This is not about attacking people's choice... it's about understanding the science and the evidence'

But it wasn't always that way for the young man "raised in a very traditional meat-eating family" who knew nothing of the "very unusual concept" of "not eating animals" until he landed at university in London.

"I took more advantage of fresh produce, legumes and wholegrains and that really worked for me. But awareness was harder back then and it was much harder to get people to understand what veganism was, let alone why anyone would be vegan." "It's also a subject that is very deep ingrained within us which I suppose relates back to the cultures we were brought up in.

"It is such a shame that the science and evidence all roll into this sort of toxic and political binary and this is happening more and more with veganism now.

Pencils are one of the key things supplied at any local polling station

Today, voters in England and Wales are heading to the polls to choose who they want in charge of their local area.

The debate over using pencils arose during the 2017 general election campaign when there was a flurry of social media posts suggesting that pencil marks could be erased, sparking fears of potential vote tampering. The response clarified that while legislation doesn't specify whether a pen or pencil should be used to complete the ballot paper, "in the UK, pencils are traditionally used for the purposes of marking ballot papers and are made available inside polling stations for voters to use".

BBC News

PSNI, BBC Northern Ireland

The corporation said the allegations relate to former BBC journalist Vincent Kearney and his work on a 2011 Spotlight documentary

The BBC has instructed lawyers to contact a specialist tribunal over claims one of its investigative reporters was spied on by police.

The claims emerged as part of a case already being examined by the Investigatory Powers Tribunal into allegations two other investigative reporters working in Northern Ireland have been subject to unlawful covert surveillance by police. In 2019, Mr Birney and Mr McCaffrey lodged a complaint with the IPT asking it to establish whether there had been any unlawful surveillance of them.

A BBC spokesperson said: "We have instructed lawyers to write to the Investigatory Powers Tribunal about the alleged PSNI surveillance of telephone data linked to the work of Vincent Kearney during his employment with the BBC, in connection with a BBC Northern Ireland Spotlight programme broadcast in 2011.

Ombudsman Al Hutchinson rejected claims his investigations lacked independence. He resigned in January 2012.
